

CPT Kiahhn' Jackson is a United States Army Officer assigned to the Judge Advocate General's Corps stationed at Fort Hood, Texas. She graduated cum laude from The University of Florida in 2010 with a Bachelor of Arts degree in Linguistics and minors in Business Administration and Spanish. She then attended law school at Louisiana State University. While a student at LSU, she worked at the Southeast Louisiana Legal Services office assisting indigent clients with basic legal services and the LSU Law Clinic assisting non-U.S. citizens with their naturalization.

CPT Jackson accepted a commission as a Judge Advocate in May of 2017 and arrived at Fort Hood in September 2017 as a Legal Assistance Attorney. In January 2018, she deployed in support of Combined Joint Task Force-Operation Inherent Resolve serving as an Operational Law Attorney and a Contract and Fiscal Attorney. While deployed, CPT Jackson advised the command on issues involving foreign terrorist fighters, detaining terrorist and the humane treatment of detained individuals as well as providing legal advice on the spending of U.S. Government defense money on the fight against ISIS.

Currently, CPT Jackson serves as an Administrative and Civil Law Attorney for III Corps Headquarters and will soon be a Special Assistant U.S. Attorney.
